

A week with PCSO Jo

Monday - A Friendly Hello

On Monday morning, PCSO Jo walked through the village with a big smile. Some children saw her shiny badge and blue hat. They stopped and stared.

"Hello!" said Jo. "My name is PCSO Jo." "What's a PCSO?" asked one little boy.

"I help people," Jo explained kindly.

"My job is to keep everyone safe and make sure our village is a happy place to live."

The children listened carefully.
"Sometimes," Jo said gently, "people forget to make kind or safe choices. They might do things that upset others or could hurt someone. We call this anti-social behaviour."

The children looked thoughtful.

"My job," Jo continued, "is to help everyone understand how to make good choices, so we can all feel happy and safe." The children smiled. They liked that idea very much.

Tuesday - The Noisy Evening Game

On Tuesday evening, some children were playing chasing games. They were laughing, shouting, and having lots of fun. But nearby, Mrs Green was resting after a long day. The loud noise made her feel tired and upset.

PCSO Jo walked over.

"It looks like you're having fun," she said warmly. "But some people are trying to relax. Loud noise can make them feel unhappy." The children stopped and thought.

"Where could we play instead?" Jo asked. "The park!" shouted one child.

"That's a great idea," said Jo.

Riley asked his dad to come with them.
Off they all went to the park, where they could laugh and run,
without disturbing anyone.
That evening, everyone felt happier.

Wednesday - The Mystery Moving Flower Pots

On Wednesday, something strange had happened.

Flower pots around the village had been moved to funny places.

One was on a bench. One was near the bus stop. One was even beside the bakery door.

People wondered, "Who did this?" Jo gathered some children to investigate.

Two children began to giggle.
"We were playing treasure hunt," they admitted.
Jo nodded kindly. "It's wonderful to be creative," she said,
"but moving things can confuse people and make extra work for others."

The children looked sorry.
"Let's put them back together," Jo suggested.
Soon, everyone helped tidy up. The flower pots were back where they belonged.
And the village looked beautiful again.

Thursday - Pebbles by the Road

On Thursday, Jo saw a child flicking small stones near the road.

It looked like fun. Jo gently walked over.

"Do you know," she asked softly, "that stones near the road can be dangerous?"

They could hit a car or hurt someone."

Riley's eyes widened. "I didn't think of that."

"That's okay," said Jo, "now you know."

They walked to the park where other children were playing safely. Tyler suggested "what if we made signs that say 'Safe Zone to Play'?"

"That's a brilliant idea" said Jo.

The children made bright signs and put them up in the park.
Now everyone knew where it was safe to play.

Friday - The Village Meeting

On Friday, PCSO Jo invited all the children to the village hall. "I am so proud of you," she said. "You've learned how to make kind and safe choices this week." The children beamed with pride. Jo handed out shiny stickers that said: "Thank you for being helpful."

Saturday and Sunday - Sharing What We Learned

At the weekend, the children talked to their families. "PCSO Jo helps people."

They said, "she keeps us safe and teaches us how to make good choices, and we can help our village too." From that week on, the children remembered:
Kind choices make a happy village. Safe choices protect everyone.
